Let the LA Times tell you about Jenny & Johnny

“The heterosexual working couple may be replacing the band of brothers as the primary unit of the 21st century rock group. In Arcade Fire, Sleigh Bells and the Dirty Projectors, a balanced blend of male and female sensibilities creates the kind of buzz once caused by all the boy energy of classic rock. Relatively balanced, that is: In most groups built around such units, the man remains the primary creative force (at least on the surface). As in most workplaces, in pop music women have made significant but limited gains.

Jenny & Johnny represent a different situation. In this couple, the woman is the powerhouse and the man, though forceful in his own ways, rises to her challenges. Jenny Lewis and Johnathan Rice have been creatively and romantically involved for half a decade; the lady, one of indie’s most successful thinking beauties, is the bigger star. Maybe that’s why this project, though lighthearted, has some of the prickliness of a real day-to-day relationship. The title may be I’m Having Fun Now, but there’s room for wisecracks, bitterness and worry amid the lovey-dovey stuff.

I’m Having Fun Now distinguishes itself from Lewis and Rice’s solo efforts, or hers with band-on-hiatus Rilo Kiley, by going for a very specific tone. The fuzzy but bright production by the duo, with help from old friends Mike Mogis (Bright Eyes) and Pierre de Reeder (Rilo Kiley), has been compared to classic AM radio fare but is really closer to the jangle pop of the 1980s -- bands like the Three O’Clock and Opal in L.A., Let’s Active out of North Carolina, and the Chills from New Zealand. It’s prettier than what today’s shoegaze revivalists do, but still a little jarring and tart.

Merging voices and exchanging lines, Lewis and Rice don’t duet so much as banter. Some, like “Switchblade,” are directed at the kinds of shifty characters a musical couple might encounter in Hollywood. Others tackle the relationship theme in language that’s highly literate and never over-sugared.

What other pop couple would dream of being together forever in a New Yorker cartoon? That’s just how urbane and aware Lewis and Rice can be, working out their power dynamic with the “record” switch on. Rating: 3 1/2 stars out of 4”

Jarrold Gorbel’s Devil’s Made A New Friend satisfies Crave-ings

“A crisp blend of classic soul, traditional rock, and Americana — Jarrod Gorbel’s Devil’s Made A New Friend is a breezy listen time and time and time again. This solo project bears the undeniable Blake Sennett (Rilo Kiley, The Elected) stamp: heartonthesleeve and dreamy lyrics about solitude and love buttered up by floating keys and days and days in a willowy falsetto that begs for the girl to come back and for that girl to stay.

Devil’s Made A New Friend is born from personal strife and professional turmoil, as good records often are. Gorbel’s departure from The Honorary Title and from the occasional bondage of studio oversight allowed this singer-songwriter to shed any pretense and write for only himself. He roped in a few notable colleagues, Sennett included, and turned apartments in Brooklyn and Los Angeles into incubators for this viscerally piercing record.

The result is a collection of ten tracks that feel close to the artist’s heart. Lyrics like, “You’re losing faith in me, frightening to think that, conscious that I had somehow slipped away gone, couldn’t feel a thing, devil’s made a new friend,” and “You can’t wash this off, your skin leaves the wreckage of your sins, feels a lot like a new beginning” are aplenty, scattered throughout Devil’s Made A New Friend. At every turn, Gorbel goes deep. There are no wasted opportunities on this syrupy release.

Highlights include “I’ll do better,” an anthemic promise that rings in sentiment of The Elected’s “I’ll Be Your Man,” “Each breath,” a potent and vital serenade, and the closer, “Weight,” a slowed down plea to hold onto love.

Gorbel’s Devil’s Made A New Friend was made for idle Sunday.” - BeatCrave.com, August 23, Rating: 8/10
